4 THINGS TO KNOW

Iconic Stones singer Jagger to undergo heart surgery

The band's North American tour has been postponed.

Rolling Stones frontman Mick Jagger will undergo heart surgery this week following the postponement of the band's North American tour for medical reasons, according to a published report.

The U.S. website Drudge Report, citing unidentified sources, said Jagger, 75, would undergo surgery this week in New York to replace a heart valve. New York Post's Page Six website, citing unidentified sources, said the surgery would involve placing a stent in the singer's heart.

Representatives for Jagger in the United States did not return requests for comment. A spokesman for the British band in London declined to comment on the Drudge Report article.

The band on Saturday announced it was postponing all dates on its tour of the United States and Canada to give Jagger time to receive medical treatment. It did not specify what treatment Jagger needed but said he is expected to make a full recovery.

The North American tour had been scheduled to run from April 20 until June 29.

Jagger was photographed on Sunday in Miami Beach, Florida, on the beach with his current girlfriend, ballet dancer Melanie Hamrick, their young son, and daughter Georgia May, one of his seven adult children.

The British singer has not explained his medical issue but told fans in a tweet on Saturday that he would be "working very hard to be back on stage as soon as I can."

After a storied sex, drugs and rock-'n-roll lifestyle in his earlier days, Jagger now follows a healthy diet, runs and works out frequently.

Stents are typically used to prop open arteries that have been cleared of a blockage. REUTERS

2 R. Kelly lawyer: Avenatti has 'polluted' sex case

R. Kelly's attorney accused the Cook County State's Attorney Monday of succumbing to pressure from attorney Michael Avenatti in bringing sex-abuse charges against the R&B singer in Illinois, saying his involvement has irreparably tainted the case. Steve Greenberg made the accusations in a court filing and in comments after a Monday pretrial hearing in Chicago, highlighting recent charges against Avenatti in New York that accuse him of trying to shake down Nike. Greenberg told reporters outside court there has been a "rush to prosecute because of pressure — all polluted — by Michael Avenatti." He said prosecutors "got in bed with Avenatti and Avenatti is toxic." The accusation that the office of Cook County State's Attorney Kim Foxx cooperated too closely with Avenatti comes amid criticism of her office's handling of the Jussie Smollett case. 3 Magician Blaine subject of sexual-assault probe

New York City police say they're investigating sexual assault allegations against magician David Blaine. Chief of Detectives Dermot Shea confirmed Monday at an unrelated news conference that Blaine is under investigation. He declined to discuss any details. He was responding to a report by the Daily Beast website that the New York Police Department had taken statements from two women accusing Blaine of sexual assault. The report said one of the allegations may fall outside the statute of limitations because it goes back to 1998. The 45-year-old Blaine is known for stunts like being buried underground for seven days without food or water. He also stayed in a plexiglass case suspended 30 feet (9 meters) in the air for 40 days. Phone and email messages requesting comment were sent to his lawyer on Monday. ASSOCIATED PRESS

4 Border shutdown would hit American palates

President Donald Trump's threat to shut down the U.S.-Mexico border would hit American consumers — in the gut. From the avocados on avocado toast, to the limes and tequila in margaritas, the United States is heavily reliant on Mexican imports of fruit, vegetables and alcohol to meet consumer demand. Nearly half of all imported U.S. vegetables and 40 percent of imported fruit are grown in Mexico, according to the latest data from the United States Department of Agriculture. Americans would run out of avocados in three weeks if imports from Mexico were stopped, said Steve Barnard, president and chief executive of Mission Produce, the largest distributor and grower of avocados in the world. "You couldn't pick a worse time of year because Mexico supplies virtually 100 percent of the avocados in the U.S. right now." REUTERS

Trump: United States census would be 'meaningless' without citizenship question

The census is required every 10 years by the Constitution.

President Donald Trump on Monday injected himself into one of the most consequential cases of the current Supreme Court term, saying the nation's 2020 census would be "meaningless" without adding a citizenship question to the questionnaire.

The comment on Twitter came ahead of an expected Supreme Court ruling by the end of June on whether Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross' decision to add the citizenship question violated federal law.

"Can you believe that the Radical Left Democrats want to do our new and very important Census Report without the all important Citizenship Question," Trump tweeted. "Report would be meaningless and a waste of the $Billions [ridiculous] that it costs to put together!"

Trump's critics have accused the White House of encouraging an undercount by dissuading Hispanics and other immigrants from participating in the census, disproportionately affecting Democratic-leaning states and municipalities.

Many states, cities and civil rights groups have gone to court over the citizenship question, which is among a series of White House policies signaling tighter control over immigration.

These include Trump's declaration in February of a national emergency to obtain funds for a wall on the U.S.-Mexico border, and his threat to close the border as soon as this week, disrupting legal crossings as well as trade.

The U.S. Constitution requires a census counting the number of residents every 10 years.

Results are used to draw political boundaries, allocate seats in Congress and at the state and local level, and distribute roughly $800 billion of federal funds.

"The census is the administration's new front on its war on immigration and, sadly, the president's tweet today bears out that concern," said Terri Ann Lowenthal, a former staff director on the House census oversight committee who now advises groups seeking an accurate 2020 count.

When Ross announced the addition of a citizenship question in March 2018, he said it was in response to a Department of Justice request for data to help enforce the Voting Rights Act, which protects eligible voters from discrimination.

U.S. Census Bureau holds briefing on 2020 census status. GETTY IMAGES

Only U.S. citizens can vote in federal elections. Non-citizens comprise about 7 percent of the 328.7 million people living in the United States. Census questionnaires have not included a citizenship question since 1950.

The Supreme Court is reviewing a Jan. 15 ruling by U.S. District Judge Jesse Furman in Manhattan that Ross broke a "veritable smorgasbord" of federal rules by adding the question, a decision he called "arbitrary and capricious."

Furman also said the Voting Rights Act was a "pretextual" rationale for adding the question, a decision that Ross had "already made for other reasons."

The judge said the change would cause many states to lose federal funding, while Arizona, California, Florida, Illinois, New York and Texas would lose congressional seats.

Furman, an appointee of Democratic President Barack Obama, stopped short of a finding that Ross intended to discriminate against immigrants.

Oral arguments at the Supreme Court are scheduled for April 23.

Steven Dillingham, who became director of the U.S. Census Bureau in January, declined to discuss Trump's tweet but said the bureau was focused on obtaining a full, complete count.

He spoke to reporters at a press briefing on Monday, one year before National Census Day marking the 2020 count.

Grammy-nominated rapper Nipsey Hussle shot and killed at 33

Rapper Nipsey Hussle was fatally shot outside the clothing store he founded to help rebuild his troubled South Los Angeles neighborhood, police said, cutting short a career that earned him a Grammy nomination this year for his major-label debut. He was 33.

Police said Hussle was one of three men shot Sunday outside Marathon Clothing, his store in South Los Angeles; the other two were in stable condition. A large crowd gathered outside the store as night fell. Detectives were canvassing the area for witnesses and looking to see if any surveillance video captured the shooting, police Lt. Chris Ramirez said. Investigators had not yet determined a motive or identified any suspects, Ramirez said.

Mayor Eric Garcetti was among the many people expressing condolences.

"Our hearts are with the loved ones of Nipsey Hussle and everyone touched by this awful tragedy. L.A. is hurt deeply each time a young life is lost to senseless gun violence," Garcetti tweeted.

Hussle, who had two children and was engaged to actress Lauren London, was an Eritrean-American whose real name was Ermias Asghedom.

"This doesn't make any sense! My spirit is shaken by this!" Rihanna wrote while posting photos of Hussle with his daughter and another with his fiancee. "Dear God may His spirit Rest In Peace and May You grant divine comfort to all his loved ones! I'm so sorry this happened to you @nipseyhussle."

Hussle was born on Aug. 15, 1985, in the same Crenshaw neighborhood where he died, and where he had been working to provide youths with alternatives to the hustling he did when he was younger.

Los Angeles Police Commissioner Steve Soboroff tweeted that he and Police Chief Michel Moore had agreed with Hussle to meet with him on Monday to "talk about ways he could help stop gang violence and help us help kids."

Hussle explained where he was coming from in a Los Angeles Times interview last year: "In our culture, there's a narrative that says, 'Follow the athletes, follow the entertainers,'" he said. "And that's cool, but there should be something that says, 'Follow Elon Musk, follow (Mark) Zuckerberg.'"

Hussle said his first passion was music but getting resources was tough after leaving his mother's house at 14 to live with his grandmother. Hussle said he got involved in street life as he tried to support himself, and he joined the gang Rollin 60's Neighborhood Crips as a teenager.

"The culture of my area is the gang culture," he explained in a 2014 interview with VladTV. "So by being outside, being involved with hustling, being in the hood, doing things to try to get money, being young, you know, riding your bike through the hood, getting shot at, your loved ones and homies that's your age getting killed, getting shot at ... it's like, we were just raised like if you with me and something goes now, I'm in it."

Music eventually happened for Hussle, who said in interviews that his stage name, a play on the 1960s and '70s rhyming stand-up comic Nipsey Russell, was given to him as a teen by an older friend because he was such a go-getter — always hustling.

Hussle released a number of successful mixtapes that he sold out of the trunk of his car, helping him create a buzz and gain respect from rap purists and his peers. In 2010 he placed on hip-hop magazine XXL's "Freshman Class of 2010" — a coveted list for up-and-coming hip-hop acts — alongside J. Cole, Big Sean, Wiz Khalifa and others.

The proud West Coast rapper continued to build more hype for himself, scoring big when Jay-Z bought 100 copies of his 2013 mixtape "Crenshaw" for $100 each, and sent him a $10,000 check.

During the 2016 presidential campaign, Hussle and rapper YG released the protest song "FDT," short for "(Expletive) Donald Trump." He later hit a new peak with "Victory Lap," his critically acclaimed major-label debut album on Atlantic Records that made several best-of lists last year, from Billboard magazine to Complex. The album debuted at No. 4 on Billboard's Top 200 Albums chart and featured collaborations with Kendrick Lamar, Diddy, CeeLo Green and more.

At this year's Grammy Awards, "Victory Lap" was one of five nominees for Best Rap Album in a year that hip-hop dominated the pop charts and streaming services and a number of top stars released projects, including Drake, Eminem and Kanye West. Cardi B's "Invasion of Privacy" won the honor.

"It's my debut album so for my first one (to be nominated) out the gate, it's like, it was overwhelming a little bit. It was ... inspiring, humbling," he said in an interview with the Recording Academy on the red carpet of the 2019 Grammys, which he attended with this daughter.

Many celebrities were mourning his death on social media. NBA star Steph Curry tweeted, "God please cover and restore @NipseyHussle right now!!!"

Outside of music, Hussle said he wanted to provide hope and motivation to those who grew up in Crenshaw like him, and pay it forward. Forbes magazine reported in February that with business partner Dave Gross, the rapper had purchased the Crenshaw plaza where his Marathon Clothing store is located, and had plans to knock it down and "rebuild it as a six-story residential building atop a commercial plaza where a revamped Marathon store will be the anchor tenant." MESFIN FEKADU AND ANDREW DALTON, ASSOCIATED PRESS

Funny at any age

Showtime's "Funny Women of a Certain Age" is available now.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Showtime's new comedy special "Funny Women of a Certain Age" features all female comics over the age of 50, which may seem unique, but that's the point. Carole Montgomery has been in the comedy game for decades and wanted a show that highlighted talent from women who truly deserve the spotlight. Montgomery is well aware of the stigma against women in comedy, especially women of a certain age. But the seasoned comedian is unafraid of showcasing those stigmas on stage; in fact, she thinks it's necessary. Montgomery hopes this stand-up show will go on for years, rotating a different cast of women who all deserve to be on-stage no matter what age they are. Montgomery sat down with Metro to talk about the show, some high and low points in her career, and why the comedy world desperately needs a female makeover.

Where did the idea for "Funny Women of a Certain Age" come from?
Well, I was doing a podcast a couple of years ago with a bunch of my friends who were all women, I think all over 50. We spent the time laughing and having such a good time telling road stories and war stories, you know, from years ago. I was coming home on the subway and I remember thinking, I want to work with my friends and I want to have fun. I'm 60 years old, I don't need to work with a 20-year-old guy who just moved out from his mother's basement — I just want to work with my friends. So I told my husband, we started talking about the idea and I thought, you know what?

It's not even just the war stories and working with the friends. These are all great, funny, strong women who for whatever reason didn't get that big break or they're not world-famous. But they are still some of the best female comics you're ever gonna see. So what happened was, we got really lucky because we got to premiere at a small comedy festival called the Cinderblock Comedy Festival. And from there, someone at the festival said they work at the Kraine Theater on the Lower East Side and they thought their boss would love this. So that turned into a residency.

How did you choose the talented cast?
You know what, if only I could show you the list of people I had. A lot of it had to do with availability and who could do the show. What a lot of people forget, especially with people who are unknown, [is] they are just out there working all of the time. So there were people we approached and they couldn't do it because they had a private gig that night or they were doing a corporate show or working on a cruise ship and couldn't get flown out. Vanessa and Terry and Lyn are all old friends of mine, so that was a no-brainer. Luenell I love and we knew each other from years ago in California — I've always loved her. Then, of course, Fran Drescher is an icon. We wanted to have a big name and we were lucky enough to get her.

Do you believe there is still a stigma regarding female comedians today?
Absolutely. A lot of what the show is about involves these stories we tell about what it's like to be a woman involved in comedy. That's one of the things I'm really proud about: I wanted people to know that we have been doing this since back in the day. Now there's a lot of girls, which I'm thrilled about, but back when I started, if there were a dozen female comics working, there would always just be one woman on a show. It's changing a little bit and I'm hoping the show will have something to do with that because what's always fascinating about bookers is that they will always say, "Oh, we can't have two women on a show because they talk about the same thing." Which is like, really? Then you have male comics doing material about whatever — being married or being a dad — but that's okay. But for some reason, women couldn't possibly have different ideas.

Overall, what can people expect from the show?
Overall, this is a no-holds-barred point of view from people who have seen it all and done it all. That's the real takeaway from this. You're going to laugh. Even people who say they don't like female comics, you're going to laugh. If it's not one of us, it's another one of us. There is something for everyone in this special.

Couture making his voice heard in MMA

The MMA legend is now the Professional Fighters League's play-by-play broadcaster.

JEFF TOMKO
jeff.tomko@metro.us

Randy Couture will forever be one of the all-time faces of MMA, and now as the full-time voice for Professional Fighters League, or PFL, "The Natural" is hoping he can find the next combat superstar to pass the torch when the league begins next month.

Call it a case of MMA overload, but so far, even Couture admits it's been a slight challenge to determine the face of the new wave of MMA fighters, even after it's been eight years since he last entered the Octagon.

It's also nearing two decades since his first UFC battle with Chuck Liddell helped shift mixed martial arts from niche sport to one of the most popular sports in the U.S.

"It's hard to come up with one or two names," Couture says. "I'll admit [MMA's] a little watered down. There are a lot of leagues out there, and it's hard [for fans] to keep up with all the fighters, especially when there's a different event a few times each weekend."

The PFL, unique to other MMA organizations, conducts a six-week "league schedule" like pro sports teams.

Weeks 1-3 will be held at Long Island's NYCB Live (tickets are already on sale at ticketmaster.com) and the next three weeks in Atlantic City, capped with a $1 million winner-take-all championship for all six weight classes on New Year's Eve in New York City.

Another big boost for the PFL this season is that it will be televised on ESPN beginning with its May 9 fight card.

Couture, however, hopes the PFL's blend of up-and-coming fighters and seasoned veterans will keep fans watching. Two to look out for are a pair Long Island natives and 2018 PFL semifinalists.

GETTY IMAGES

Lightweight Chris Wade, who lost to eventual champion Natan Schulte (who will also be returning in 2019), and featherweight Andre Harrison, the 2017 champion (when it was the World Series of Fighting) who was 20-0 prior to his upset loss to eventual champion Lance Palmer, are faces to watch. "These are guys fans should have on their radar," Couture says.

Another name: 2012 and 2016 U.S. Olympic judo gold medalist Kayla Harrison, who will headline the PFL's women's lightweight division, a first this year. "It's amazing to have Kayla fighting with us in this tournament," Couture says. "Kayla's definitely a fighter worth watching."

Who you won't see making his PFL or MMA debut anytime soon is Chris Pratt, although if you follow the actor on social media you'll regularly see him sparring and posing with Couture at Los Angeles MMA hot spot Unbreakable Performance.

Social media went crazy this week after one of Unbreakable's founders, "NFL on Fox" star Jay Glazer, told TMZ that Pratt hits harder than the former UFC champion. Even with the verbal jabs, Couture says grappling with Pratt on the mats has been a fun experience

"It's been a lot of fun training with Chris," Couture, also a three-time All-America wrestler at Oklahoma State, says. "He's a tough dude who takes [wrestling] really seriously. And coming from a wrestling background [Pratt was a high school wrestler], I don't normally get to work with another wrestler. Hopefully Chris remembers that when he's casting his next movie.

Off the mat, Couture is also keeping busy in the weight room, staying in fighting shape for another battle on the big screen. Playing "Toll Road" in the "Expendables" franchise, Couture looks like the small guy on a set which features Hollywood heavyweights Sylvester Stallone, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Terry Crews and Jason Statham.

"I mostly do free weights now," Couture says. "Having to keep up with Sly [Stallone] on the set, I need all the strength I can get."

MATT BURKE

With the retirement of Rob Gronkowski, the long-in-the-tooth age of Julian Edelman (32), and the countless question marks surrounding Josh Gordon, the Patriots sure could stand to add another receiving target for Tom Brady this offseason.

Here are a few options based on likelihood.

AJ Green celebrates a game-winning touchdown against the Falcons last season in Atlanta. SCOTT CUNNINGHAM

AJ Green

Green is entering the final year of his contract with Cincinnati, and Bengals ownership has always been stingy. With what looks to be a rebuilding season on the horizon, the best move this offseason may be trading the face of their franchise.

New head coach Zac Taylor is from Sean McVay's infant coaching tree, but will be unable to replicate the Rams formula, roster-wise. The Rams signed and traded for every big name under the sun last offseason. That's not happening in Cincinnati.

Owner Mike Brown would much rather prefer Taylor build up the team through the draft, and trading away Green would yield quite the draft haul.

The Pats were in the mix for Golden Tate and Adam Humphries but whiffed when the money got too high. Bill Belichick has shown that he will pay market value when the return is great enough, and Green is one of the few receivers in the league who lives up to his hefty contract.

Five years ago, the Patriots brought on high-priced cornerback Darrelle Revis in a trade. In essence, the Pats rented Revis for one year, allowing him to up his free-agency worth with a Super Bowl run. New England could now do the same for the championship-starved Green.

The Patriots have three picks in the first two rounds of the 2019 draft and have compensatory picks up the ying-yang. The Pats are a team that will no doubt make a trade between now and draft night. Just how big of a trade remains to be seen.

Likelihood: Highly unlikely

Emmanuel Sanders

If the Patriots were to make a trade with the Broncos, it likely wouldn't happen until after the season starts. Denver wants to see if it has anything with Joe Flacco, but if the team gets off to a slow start, John Elway could opt to trade Sanders — who will also be in the final year of his contract.

Sanders signed a restricted free-agent offer sheet with the Pats back in 2013 but Pittsburgh wound up matching the offer.

The former SMU great is exactly the type of receiver who thrives in the Patriots offense as he's more or less Deion Branch on steroids.

Likelihood: Unlikely

The Draft

The Patriots also have their eyes set on the NFL Draft as they're scheduled to meet with Notre Dame's Miles Boykin, Mississippi's AJ Brown and Arizona State's N'Keal Harry.

Only Brown is a projected first-round pick while Boykin and Harry are expected to go anywhere from the second to fourth round.

Likelihood: Extremely likely

City Winery hosting event with Jerry Remy tonight

City Winery Boston is hosting a special event tonight as legendary Red Sox TV analyst and former player Jerry Remy sits down with host Adam Kaufman, of WBZ, for an evening of Remy talking sports and all things Boston.

The event will also feature special game-day ballpark food and drink specials to add to the fun!

Doors open at 6 p.m., with the event set to kick off at 8 p.m. You can purchase tickets to tonight's event at CityWinery.com/Boston.

You can also purchase exclusive meet-and-greet tickets to talk with Remy one-on-one.

Remy is a Massachusetts native, having grown up in Somerset.

An MLB All-Star in 1978, Remy played seven seasons with the Red Sox before retiring in 1985. He is most known by baseball fans, however, as being in the Boston TV booth since 1988. Remy announced during the Red Sox's World Series victory parade that he was "kicking cancer's ass" and he soon after announced that he was cancer-free. The 66-year-old Remy has battled cancer several times since 2008.

City Winery is located at 80 Beverly St. in Boston.

Aries Mull over the possibilities, and eliminate what doesn't interest you. Stay focused on what's important and what will bring you the most joy. Be secretive about personal matters.

Taurus Hard work will pay off. Rely on yourself, not on someone offering the impossible. Make choices based on what's practical and what will bring the most satisfaction. Keep personal information secret.

Gemini Take a deep breath before you engage in something you'll regret. Arguing won't lead to gains, but taking charge and looking out for your best interest will.

Cancer Communicate, share and get things done. Relationships will improve if you are open and honest about your expectations. A positive change is heading your way, and personal improvements are favored.

Leo Participate in events that broaden your outlook and encourage you to contribute to your community. Helping others will lead to an interesting connection or proposal. Pay attention to detail.

Virgo Question anything that appears to be suspicious. Expect someone to exaggerate or to bully you. Set ground rules and don't put up with interference. Keep the peace and walk away from chaos.

Libra Take your time and work on personal improvements. If someone pressures you, ulterior motives are probably present. Avoid someone meddling in your affairs by keeping your plans to yourself.

Scorpio A change will rejuvenate you. Consider what you'd like to be doing, and look into the possibilities. Use your skill in a unique way to discover a hidden talent.

Sagittarius Emotional difficulties will set in if you let someone push you into something you shouldn't be doing. Be blunt and say no to manipulative people and dubious situations.

Capricorn Return to something or someone that has been good for you or good to you in the past. You can revive a plan that helps you move forward.

Aquarius Be skeptical of anyone pushing you to get involved in something risky. You are best off doing your own thing and sticking to a budget you can afford.

Pisces Choose your battles wisely. You are better off taking care of your personal affairs yourself and letting others do the same. Good relationships will depend on honesty and equality. EUGENIA LAST
